

When Rama and Lakshmana came back to the camp they found the hut empty. Rama knew something like this would happen. As they both feared, they found the hut empty. They had seen the omens all along the way. Rama, beside himself, began to search for Sita; he began crying for Sita. Only here is Rama depicted as but a simple man with great love and affection for his woman, for his wife. Two things are there. One is his own duty and his sense that he should not have gone off, in spite of what Sita asked. The second thing is that he had lost her. He could not help but think of her in another's hands and how she was going to suffer. Rama's mind, his whole body, seemed to have lost all their powers. He could not even think properly. He was pleading to the trees and birds, asking if they had seen Sita. He lost his balance for the time being.
