After Bharata was gone, Rama, the one whose senses and mind are mastered, the man of discipline, the one who is bound to truth, the one who is born to riches, the one whose mind is focused, who is not distracted from his commitment to fulfilling the words of his father, expecting that the city people will again come back to implore him, along with Sita and Lashmana, packed his few things and left Citrakuta for the dense forests of Dandakaranya. In the forest, Rama, whose eyes are as pleasing as the petals of a red lotus, and those with him are attacked by a demon, a rākṣasa. Rama fought with and slew the rākṣasa. This is the idea: good and evil all the time. Good always wins. In the forest Rama also spent time with the sages Sharabhanga and Sutikshnam, also known as Agastya and his brother. It looked as though Rama's going to the forest was not a mistake and not a threat to the kingdom. It looked as though it was all planned very well. Rama could remove all the demons and he could have the darśana of all the sages. To see all these wise men is a rare thing.

At the request of Agastya, Rama accepted a bow, a special abode of arrows, and two divine quivers with countless, endless, divine arrows which had been given by Indra. Tuni is the name of one of the quivers. Agastya gave these because he knew all of them would be needed later when there would be problems. Agastya being what he was, knowing what was in store, gave Rama these weapons. Highly pleased, Rama took the gifts as a blessing.

Those who lived in the forests, vanācārah, including all the wise men, ṛṣis, came to know that Rama was among them. The news went round that Rama had battled and destroyed the rākṣasa. All those who dwelled in the forest joined and came to Rama at his camp. The sages stood in front and the others followed. They came to tell Rama of the asuras and rākṣasas in the forest. Asuras and rākṣasas are demons and devilish people - there is not much difference between them. The people came to ask Rama that these demons be disciplined or destroyed, that they be kept from disturbing the locals' rituals and their peace. The rākṣasas were notorious for waiting until the very last acts of the sacrifices conducted by the brāhmaṇas. Then the rākṣasas would come and extinguish the sacred fire, they would spit on it, defile it, spoiling the invocation and the sacraments, claiming the territory. The good forest people saw controlling the rākṣasas as the king's job, as Rama's job. It was not the sages' job because the sages were committed to ahimsā, and they would not strike another being. The hunters and gatherers and other people of Dandaka ran in fear from the dangerous rākṣasas, and the sages, who had the powers to retaliate, would not act with violence.

Rama gave the ṛṣis his word that he would provide protection from the rākṣasas. “Let it be, tathāstu,” he promised the ṛṣis, who are pure like fire, who are pure and remain pure, who are brilliant like fire, who are powerful like fire. He gave his pratijñā to all those living in the Dandaka forest. It was clear that the rākṣasas were in trouble now. The people were happy; they knew the problem would be dealt with in time.

From the nearby Janasthana woods came Shurpanakha, a rākṣasī, a female demon, who could assume any form at any time. Seeing Rama and Lakshmana, these two young, strapping, strong men, she assumed the form of an attractive young woman and approached them. Lakshmana was her first target. Lakshmana is not as magnanimous as Rama. The rākṣasī made overtures to Lakshmana. Lakshmana abruptly cut off her nose with his sword. He knew it was Shurpanakha, the rākṣasī, and that she was just trying to lure him and destroy him. He did not kill her, she just lost her nose. She was furious, but still she was curious, and she went back with her damaged nose and told all her folks, the other rākṣasas. Even though she had assumed a form, her very nose was damaged. It is like when you cut the snake you have seen on the rope and you find that only the rope is in two pieces. She told the other rākṣasas how these two rogues had invaded their territory and hurt her. She encouraged them to teach these two a lesson. She roused them to action.

“The three conclusions – I am mortal, I am unhappy or incomplete, and I am ignorant – form the basis of all my activities. This three-fold conclusion is the problem. Vēdānta says this is an unwarranted problem. In the vision of Vēdānta, you are just the opposite of what you take yourself to be. “I am sad” is the problem and that is solved only when I see that “I” as other than sad, as free from sadness. Vēdānta says that “I” is free from sadness.”
